

BOW ISLAND REVIEW.

VOL. 3. NO. 17

BOW ISLAND, ALBERTA, FRIDAY, APRIL 26th, 1912

SUBSCRIPTION $1.50 A YEAR

Flower Plains.

The beautiful spring weather we have been getting of late is being taken full advantage of by the farmers and seedling is progressing nicely. Had we had a favorable fall for getting the land ready for spring the acreage of crop in the world would have been considerably larger, but even so it is there will be a large increase over for next year.

A petition is in circulation here for us. This is an institution that is very much needed. It is a very poor way to direct us to settle down to live in a new country and put interest and principal on a pre-emption and other inconveniences incidental to pioneer life. They ought to level 10 or 15 miles to a post-office to take care of mail, but once a week. We are not inclined to grumble, but we think it is about time our Bowden government began to sit up and take notice, or they will deserve to go the way of their predecessors.

Mr. and Mrs. James Moran left last week for Great Falls, Montana. Mr. Moran returned after a few days' absence, for like Noah's dove, he could find no rest for the soles of his feet. No place like Sunny Alberta, is there.

The trustees of Flower Plains school district have advertised for a teacher, but Alberta seems to have a very short supply of these very useful citizens.

The weather man is certainly making up for lost time in the nice weather he has been giving us.

A tract of land east of town was thrown open for homesteading on April 1st and was eagerly taken up. It comprised six sections in 6-9 and section 88. Most of it was a little rolling, but the prairie soil of the Weyburn-Lethbridge area is going through here made it desirable.

Mr. Comby reports having threshed a yield of 97 1/2 bushels of oats to the acre off a crop grown on 8-9-10 in 1911. As Mr. Johnson had oats that weighed 49 pounds to the bushel, these speak well for our district.

According to the new municipal law the province is to be divided into municipalities, eighteen miles square, beginning at the south-east corner. This will leave one municipality consisting of townships 4, 5 and 6, in ranges 7, 8 and 9. The power is given over to those in Eastern Canada. This is certainly a step in the right direction, for while centralization of power may be the best way, the government is in a position to handle the local affairs of a community by a local organization. We understand steps have already been taken to effect in Bowden.

Lost or strayed from Stony Longhouse a small man—about the size of a boy, no band. Detainee will be prosecuted.

A letter was received from T. A. Ross in which he offered to lease the town two acres of land for a granite quarry at a rental of $15.

Reference to the Health Committee to draft agreement.

The following accounts were ordered to be paid if found correct: J. E. Beglin, $22.00; E. H. Beglin, acting constable, $1.00; J. W. Reid, returning officer, added expenses to Medicine Hat, hotel bill, poll clerk, $16.00; W. A. Beglin, solicitor, services in connection with incorporation, $1.00.

A bill was submitted by the Bow Island Gas Co. for the approval of the Council. After some consideration, it was voted to order the services of a solicitor to give the Council advice on the matter.

The Fire, Water and Light Committee reported that boring had commenced for water on the public park.

The Horseshoe Brae valve has arrived, and now we are the only ones waiting patiently for the day to come.

"To me it's death, but who cares about it?" said the man at the throttle and Art McCullough supplying the steam.

Oh, yes, kind friends, dear Flower Plains, I am sorry still in the game, but I am too busy farming these horses to do much more than thinking.

Last Saturday a.m. there was quite an excitement in the north east corner of the city. A team of twenty men with horses and guns were seen flying over the prairie, apparently heading for the Weyburn-Lethbridge area, going through here made it desirable.

Eat What You Like

And What Agrees With You, but Do Not Eat Too Much

Digestion Will be Good if You Regulate the System With

KIDNEY - LIVER PILLS

Overeating is the great cause of disease and debility. The digestive system becomes clogged with poisonous waste material. The digestive organs then follow kidney disorders of the most painful and fatal form such as rheumatism, heart disease, etc.

The beginning is almost invariably with the liver and should be overcome by the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills before serious disease occurs.

An occasional dose of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills when the liver gets sick will keep it healthy and will keep will keep the whole digestive system in healthy working order.

Those who have found this out by their own experience will not think of being without this medicine again. Others have been restored to health and strength who had reached more serious and complicated stages.

most mother cannot remember the time of her childhood when the castor oil bottle was the remedy. The dream which she looked forward to a dose of it—the fight she all mothers will glad to share with Modern science has banished the bad smelling, evil-tasting, grating, castor oil remedy—a remedy popular to take mild, though thorough in action, all day long. It has a taste so agreeable, so water-alike so sensitive to the animal to an electrical disturbance.

The chameleon barometer is a curiously which has puzzled many people, and this may be learned in seconds. Fairly simple to use, it consists of a wire stretched out on a blotting paper, and then immersed in a solution of chlorine and sodium iodide. Any chlorine expert will make up this mixture.

A more beautiful chemical hygrometer is that of a flower made when the growing plant is immersed in the coldest in the coldest mixture. This flower is the most delicate and most brilliant pink to white, with the changes in the degree of dampness.

A somewhat curious storm-glass was introduced by the late Admiral Fitzjames, who died in 1852. This glass stopped but with a small hole through the cork. Into the tube were put some salt, sulphuric acid, and water, and ammonia, alcohol and water.

It is said that the glass is sold by medical dealers or by mail order houses, but no manufacturer is known.

CHAPTER XII

An Officer and a Gentleman
As most people are aware, the camp-followers of the turf are a large class. They are not to be despised, nor are we to say the least of it, peculiar. The nobly army numbers people of all kinds, from the swarthy, bearded swaggers West End Club to the humblest seller of cards and various articles. Among these, in his time, came Angus Phillips. He was a man who that he was a professional hacker of horses, a description which covers a wide range of work, and a great many means of getting a living—more or less honestly.

Angus Phillips would have represented the impulsion that he was nothing else if he had been connected with racing, but he was found to be up to something more than that. All the same he was fond of horses in his way. He had had them taken away from him, however, by the public enemies of his father's public-house, and the other followers of racing or racing in any way, up to the last.

"I have been born, too, in the greatest of the racing families, and always take the greatest interest in the dramatic side of the turf. There were some very interesting incidents in the past century but he had the details of it by heart."

He turned to his departure for South Africa he had followed racing from one corner to another, and he had no desire to do anything but liberally disown it, but he was so honest that he always seemed to have money in his pocket and was always well off. He had a gipsy belonging to one of the leading Roman tribal Phillips found in the desert, and he had never been passing the time of day with a wandering nomad, as he considered himself, than once he had benefitted by his politeness. Had he not been a man of the world, he would have been something uncommonly smart in the way of a human ferret, he knew what he wanted and how to get it, son. Strange as it may seem, there has never been a great fraud committed in the history of the world, but the treachery whirled amongst us, and the ears of the authorities. More than once Phillips had listened to the outbursts of the men who had conspired to consigned the marmates of a Jockey Club if they could have it. And when he was in the middle of the race, he managed to pick up the thread of a conversation with a man who was trying to make for sensational disclosures. It was an additional satisfaction to Phillips to learn that his old enemies in this plot were his old enemies, Raymond Cooley and Foster. He had planned to meet them at his way and at last he had something really definite to go upon.

He had heard that Phillips already had these two in the hollow of his hand, and he had been in the hench in the hard school of adversity and had no intention of throwing himself into the same trap, and the mere sake of revenge. At any moment he might have pricked the gills and have laid both scoundrels by the heels (a fact that would have ended his career in South Africa) but he had a considerable sojourn in South Africa, and beyond that he had something really definite to go upon.

He turned to his lodgings that Phillips already had these two in the hollow of his hand, and he had been in the hench in the hard school of adversity and had no intention of throwing himself into the same trap, and the mere sake of revenge. At any moment he might have pricked the gills and have laid both scoundrels by the heels (a fact that would have ended his career in South Africa) but he had a considerable sojourn in South Africa, and beyond that he had something really definite to go upon.

He turned out of his lodgings on a short notice, and went to Boston. There he was more carefully dressed than usual, and wore a grey overcoat and hat. His clothes were neat, his body well polished, his white cravat, there was no suggestion of the raving man about him. He had a certain air of importance, and walking along the street, knocking at the door of a certain house, asked for Major Carden. The Major, he was informed, was just finishing his breakfast, but he would see Mr. Phillips if that gentleman would wait.

It was the typical room in a lodging-house, shabby Axminster carpet, dim light, and the inevitable lusters on the mantelpiece. The tablecloth was now too clean, though, to be seen, and the flowers, tastefully arranged. At one end of the table sat a stout, pink-faced peasant, with a mournful triste expression and heavy in manner, with a pale of faded grey eyes faintly tinged with blue. He was a man who had been accustomed to mix with the best people, as he would have phrased it himself, and he was a man who had been accustomed to make both ends meet.

The seat at the head of the table was an exceedingly pretty girl, with the most lovely hair, and her beauty attracted because the shabby black dress was of the plainest. She was a girl who had come to the Major's home. She appeared to have a proper respect and affection for her father figure. The Major looked up from the table and nodded gently.

"I am afraid I am a little late," he said. "I am sorry. Alice, my daughter, has come in. Dr. Phillips is a distinguished man. I was telling you last night that we are of us connected in the same paper."

As the Major spoke, he wiped his hands on his coat-sleeve. What the Major was driving at he hadn't the remotest idea.

The girl said elegantly. "She is a girl who had the impression that she had no friends, and that her young life was to be spent for the benefit of her selfish and somewhat dissipated father. She is a girl who has no time to care for me, but she is a girl who excused the two men together. Immediately she was gone, the Major turned to his daughter again, with a smile of bracity from which he helped himself liberally. Phillips curled up again.

"I am afraid I am a little late," he said. "I am afraid I was not a good host."

"I am afraid I am a little late," he said. "I am afraid I was not a good host."

"I am afraid I am a little late," he said. "I am afraid I was not a good host."

Loss of the Titanic.

"At the depth of twelve miles the pressure of water is so great that it would take 6,000 pounds to the square inch, which is far too great to be overcome by buoyancy ordinarily given to drowning bodies by the gases that are generated in time."

"That the bodies sank to the bottom of the sea there is no question," he continued. "The Titanic's victims who were not carried down with the boat, followed until the bottom of the sea was reached. Then when no more room was available, they started their descent with a half-mile, a mile, or at any other point."

"Great changes have naturally been wrought in the last four days in the evidence to prove to which it has been subjected. No effect was produced on any portion, or compartment, or room to whose inside as well as outside, water had access. In such cases that come from one side neutrally, that from the other."

"But wherever there was an air-tight or water-tight compartment, 6,000 pounds to the square inch pressure of water had ruptured those walls of the vessel as if they were tissue paper."

Oce Long Continuous Mean

Washington, April 23.—The life and death struggles of victims of the Titanic disaster have led to Senate investigating Committee today by Third Officer Herbert John Pitman, of the sunken liner.

Chairman Pittman, of the committee, pressed Pitman regarding several of the causes of the ship's long hours of distress before the ship went down," he said.

"How far away were the cities from the life boats?"

"About 1,000 miles, probably some of them. I told my men to pull towards them that we might be able to save a few more. The people in my boat demurred. They said it would be a mad idea."

"Did anyone in your boat urge or appeal to you to go back towards the wreck?"

"No, not one."

"Had any women urged you to go back?"

"No."

"Who denounced the men with the boats?"

"Me. So they stayed my orders and told it was a mad idea, that we should sail another 10 to 12 hours if drawn down. That we took in oats and lay quiet."

When Pittman yielded to the inquiries of the passengers he did not know that his remedy paid in the end and drifted.

"Describe the screams."

"Don't, Sir, please, I would rather not talk about it."

"I'm sorry to press, but what was it like? Were the screams intermitting, gurgling or continuous?"

"It was one long continuous moan."

The witness said the moans and cries continued an hour and that he made no effort to go to the rescue.

"You drifted in the vicinity of the steamer and made no effort to give them aid?" asked Senator Smith in surprise.

"Please sir, don't," pleaded Pittman. "I cannot bear to see the scenes I witnessed, rather than affect the scene."

"I have a desire to have your feelings," said Senator Smith, but failed to know whether you drifted there without offering aid. "Answer, if you will, yes or no."

"No, sir, answered the witness.

"Did you hear anything of a boat known as the Hoyal Oly?" suddenly asked Senator Smith.

"No, I did not. There may be a boat by that name," said Pittman.

He had been docked in New York April 17 and was said to have encountered an iceberg near where the Titanic sank. It has been suggested that the Oly may have been the boat whose lights Fourth Officer Boxhall saw and which he ineffectually tried to signal with disastrous results.

"That the Secretary further informs His Royal Highness, Duke of Connaught, of the number of the members of the association that His Royal Highness should consent to be Patron of the Canadian Highway Association?"

The following reply was received a few days ago by E. W. Luce, secretary of the association.

"Resolved that Secretary send to His Royal Highness, Duke of Connaught, a copy of the number of the members of the association that His Royal Highness should consent to be Patron of the Canadian Highway Association."

The following reply was received a few days ago by E. W. Luce, secretary of the association.

Duke of Connaught

Joins in Movement for Good Roads.

Moved by the same high public spirit and the single purpose of improving the roads of Canada up to the extent of making a credit to the nation, to set an example to the world at large, His Royal Highness, the Duke of Connaught, and W. J. Kerr, president of the Canadian Highway Association, have the two highest positions in the gift of that nation and president, respectively.

"The Canadian Highway will be an accomplished fact within the next few years, and the whole world will then know that in this broad Dominion there is a road more than 3,000 miles long over which automobile travel from coast to coast is safe and with comfort. The country that outdoes the wealthy tourist in the quality of its roads that Canada can boast will have the magnificent scenery and exceptional opportunities of investment, which will reap a large harvest from its visitors."

The association was formed in New Westminster, B. C., last November, and it was at this meeting that Mr. Kerr, a resident of that coast and a principal member of the organization, was elected president. Some time later the Governor-General of Canada, whose activity in the cause of good roads is well known, to those interested in this work, was requested to permit his name to be used as Patron, the following resolution being forwarded to him after a meeting of the executive of the association.

Moved by Vice-Chairman E. W. Luce, and Seconded by Mr. E. F. Todd—His Royal Highness, the Duke of Connaught, Governor-General of Canada, having in many ways shown his interest in good roads, and more recently by his speech from the throne at the first formal opening of parliament, it is therefore,

"Resolved that Secretary send to His Royal Highness, Duke of Connaught, a copy of the number of the members of the association that His Royal Highness should consent to be Patron of the Canadian Highway Association."

The following reply was received a few days ago by E. W. Luce, secretary of the association.

Dear Sir:

I am writing by the Governor-General to acknowledge receipt of your letter, and to inform you in reply that His Royal Highness will be pleased to become Patron of the Canadian Highway Association as requested by your executive committee.

His Royal Highness is much interested in the subject of good roads and wishes your association every success. I am

Yours faithfully,

Arthur E. Shaden,

Private Secretary.

The Duke of Connaught has long been interested in good roads and has shown in many ways that he is strongly in sympathy with the movement that will tend to better the transportation facilities of this or any other country. Travelled man as he is, and trained in observations of that kind, he is the proper person to be chosen as Patron. His Royal Highness has the power to use the knowledge gained in Canada, England, on the continent and in foreign countries, and he believes he has acted wisely in allowing his name to be used as Patron in connection with the enterprise started by the Canadian Highway Association.

"Good roads are a social and economic necessity, and we will have all of Canada before us ready to acknowledge that the work of the Canadian Highway Association is finished," says President W. J. Kerr. And he means every word of it.

Uncle Philemon's Ghost

And How Its Visits Were Stopped

By CLARISSA MACKIE.
Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

That for a ghost, cried Clarke, with a contemptuous snarl of the gods. "Who ever saw one? Did you, Evans?"

"Perhaps," said his friend evasively. "I'm certain whether I did or not, Evans will invited you down to meet with me and have uncertainty certainty."

"In other words, when is the ghost seen?" asked in his favorite caustic manner.

"Usually at 12," returned Evans dryly. "Now, so that you may not become nervous through anticipation, let us begin the grousing story of my Uncle Philemon, Uncle Philemon and run to pieces!"

They drew closer to the library door, while the servant who had been sent to take the dogs paid a visit of refreshments close at hand. Then the two withdrew, leaving the two remaining sitting in the room, with the curtains drawn, whose walls were lined with tall bookcases variegated with large family portraits.

"The ghost with the teary eye?" demanded Clarke suddenly as he lunged down his chair and leaped to the floor of the paintings. "That's the fireplace?"

"That's my Uncle Philemon's Uncle Philemon," explained Evans solemnly from his chair, "and he's been here since the day he died."

"I've got a right to a curtain over the picture. With due respect to your ancestors, Evans, man, ne'er saw so disgreecable a party as that sort."

"Evans, if you prefer it, Ed, we can go to some place else."

"I'm not afraid of the dark," said Clarke, a trifle put out in manner.

"Yes, why?"

"Want somebody else?" asked Clarke.

"Your servant, I suppose?"

"Whether he's a combination of mighty gray chiffons?" ended Clarke with a smile.

"They won't do at all—too much of the emotional about them. What we need for these experiments are men of real power."

"Try to—" said Clarke helplessly.

"I've been thinking Dan went off to England," said Clarke, "wouldn't it be a good idea for you to step up to the shade of my uncle and endeavor to bring him back in his guise in that of rest and sleep?"

"Dan, I suppose?"

SILAS OF HEBRON VALLEY

A Wall Street Deal and What It Brought Him.

By M. J. PHILLIPS.

John G. Davidson, with his clean-shaven, comely face, chest chin, blue eyes and firm jaw, might have been apprezzed as an actor. He might have been misapprezzed for a popular screen star or a professional baseball player. His age was apparently any where between thirty and fifty years. He had all the go of good living and prosperity that man of the world is supposed to wear.

All guessess as to his profession, however, were wrong. He was a man of wealth. He was never seen in the office of the firm of Davidson & Cole of Wall street, a firm which bore a rather similar reputation. Even now he was burrowing his way through the back streets of Maine which had been cut short by the tip, frequently received, of a big salaried man the next day on the Stock Exchange.

In other words, Davidson & Cole were managing a picture service of hundred thousand dollars a month. Davidson was a man who could afford to live in a death grippe for the control of the New York and Western. Each stock held about $20,000 worth of stock. Speculators and investors held the other third, mostly in small blocks. The others needed the rest. It was said, to him, that he was a dangerous competitor. The Illinois crowd desired it for them very possibilites.

The stock was down to 75; but, according to the information gleaned by the探子, Silas' father's face was one of fear instead of anger for the game constituting the balance of power.

Despite the suspicion which attaches to him on Wall street, Davidson's face was one of innocence and trust. When, at a leisure luncheon point, Silas Ashlar entered the smokers of the train, he was the snowflake of a man. He was a little older than the storming—he took the seat beside the broker.

Silas was twenty-five, his god-matured face, unclouded by the stress of city life, was round and immature, yet without those native shrewdnesses in him which made him a born stormer—the took the seat beside the broker.

Davidson was a man to inspire not only confidence, but confidence. Besides, he was in the market for conversation.

The country youth was unbounding himself to this agreeable stranger as he had never done with his father. "I'm going to Hebron Valley, in Vermont," he said. "I'm clerk in old man Briggs' general store. The boys there are still in the fourth."

"The man wants to retire now, and I'd like to buy the business."

"I see," replied Davidson coolly.

Silas had a look with clumsy fingers on the window sill and smiled with embarrassment before he proceeded.

"There's—there's a girl, you know," added Briggs' daughter. I suppose?"

"No," Dennis Gardner. "We're engaged. You see, 'Thar's why I've written the sure."

"Feel as if you'd ought to be set up in business before you marry?"

"Well, no; I don't," replied the young man reluctantly. "And Dennis' dad; neither does he. But you know he's John Gardner, the banker at Hebron—he don't like me; thinks I ain't got money enough, I guess. Then there's the fact, the postmaster, he wants me to marry to."

Davidson's interest quickened. "Why don't you run away with the girl?" he asked.

"She won't do it." She's afraid of her father. She is his mother, for that matter, and a half."

"He'd never let you marry if you owed the store?"

"Yes, and that's just some of his sins. He's a bad son, I guess. And he's John Gardner, the banker at Hebron—he don't like me; thinks I ain't got money enough, I guess. Then there's the fact, the postmaster, he wants me to marry to."

"Well, I'll get the sweethearts at Hebron's shop."

"Very well. Let's have your five hundred." There's something on the board, I think."

Bristol's Dyspeptic Pig

Story of an Up to Date Farmer

By CLARISSA MACKIE

The sun shone down on Frank Bristol's model farm, but there was no sunshine in the heart of its owner, Mr. Bristol. He was glum and the soul of the owner's pig. The stout black bristled boar lay inert on a bed of clean straw against the clean wall of its scientifically built pen-curt.

The model farmer sat on the top of the cement, wall watching his black pig with anxious eyes. The pig had been lying there since morning, scarcely moving the tiniest fraction, save for the time when Mrs. Bristol, his housekeeper, had reluctantly placed the "Sweet mill's" too good for pigs, Mrs. Bristol," Ann Dangler had said as sharply as she dared.

"Sweet food makes sweet pigs," repeated Mrs. Bristol coolly, and Ann had tossed her head and returned to her kitchen to bang the pots and let the steam out.

"It looks as if it was going to make dead pork this time," she grumbled.

Quite regardless of Ann Dangler's opinion, Frank Bristol continued to sit on the wall of his pigpen and contemplate the portentous form of its solitary occupant. He was a hamster, except that he was a pig, living in a pig-having in a scientifically built and cleanly pen. But he was failing.

Frank Bristol had refused to eat of the delicious food set forth by the highly scandalized housekeeper.

"It's impossible," shrieked Violet Sloan's accents. "What on earth did you do in it? If Frank Bristol can't eat, I'm afraid we have nice clean pigs in a cement pig-pen."

"I'm afraid," was Ann's reply as she gazed at the dully dressed boy to the cement wall.

"There is a saying: Shall we go and live like pigs?" said Violet, still waiting for Ann's reply she moved toward the patent gate, Ann trotting close behind. The sight that met their eyes was ghastly.

Around and around the circular pen, around the weird form of the model farmer, the pig struggled with grim persistence the dying pig.

Whenever Bristol shot a tendency to slacken his gait the pig grunted and snorted.

"Nonetheless," retorted Violet. "Who doesn't know of any one that died in it?

"If Frank Bristol can't eat, I'm afraid we have nice clean pigs in a cement pig-pen."

"I'm afraid," was Ann's reply as she gazed at the dully dressed boy to the cement wall.

"There is a saying: Shall we go and live like pigs?" said Violet, still waiting to be told what Frank Bristol was doing.

Thoroughly angry, Bristol swung the model horse to the head so as to have the pig's hindquarters through his hands to the side of the pen.

Now there was without a weapon.

The animal charged him again, grunting angrily.

He did not dare look at the gate, for he was conscious of feelings of guilt.

When she was alone, Ann Dangler usually stirred the fire and set on the stool of skinned milt. That was always the way these arguments with Frank Bristol ended. It was apparent that she was in the same room, only one "Lose" on the model farm.

Meanwhile Bristol had provided himself with a necessary and had made the shape of a bath-tub and had made his way to the pig.

The animal was breathing heavily, now and then snorting a base note.

Frank Bristol opened the patent gate and stepped inside, closing the door behind him. He went back to the model, unbuttoning his vest and patted him gently with the sharp end of the hankie.

He had just finished squeezing the pig from his bed and ran to the farther corner of the pen.

"What are you doing in there?" he asked, through the door.

Bristol turned around. "Ah, Mr. Daley, how are you today?"

"Pretty fair. Don't seem to be nothing the matter with you, Bristol."

"In forcing me to take a little exercise," said Bristol, once more jogging the pig around the bath-tub and sidestepping as the animal raced around the pen. "It's got a bad case of indigestion, and I'm trying to cure it."

Bretay opened a capacious mouth and roared. "Why ever heard of a pig having indigestion?" he asked.

"Well, I don't see why not," Bristol, his letter mailed him up a mess of hog fennel and make him drift it off to the nearest place where he could get around like that. He always wasn't created to take violent exercise." "Isn't that their nature?" so do do."

"To be sure—take-to—it—pretty-naturally," puffed Bristol, as he dodged to and fro, getting in tabs at the animal.

"You mark my words, young man, you'll have that there pig chasing you before long!" said Mr. Daley's ominous pronouncement.

Frank Bristol had realized this already. Whatever had been the master with his pig, the animal had apparently been fed with unwholesome food, eddy with unexpected crudity, and try as he might, the model farmer could not escape from the charge that he was being negligent in his care of the pig, and that he was responsible for the patient dog and get out of the pen.

Now and then the race around the enclosure reached a stage when Frank Bristol was in pursuit of the pig, but that was when the pig fell behind a little. Once Frank turned and yelled at the pig. Just as a woman would yell at a child, but the pig only dropped his snout to the ground and charged at him.

"I wish—I—hadn't—made—this—wall—bring—out—that grub—o'—it!" he said later, as he complained over the thought and the taste of the meal he had eaten with milk. This time the pig nearly reached him. He managed to jab again at the pig, and the pig stopped in front of the man and grunted defiance at his owner. It was at that moment Frank heard the sound of a bell above the high stone wall of its scientifically built pen-curt.

The model farmer sat on the top of the cement, wall watching his black pig with anxious eyes. The pig had been lying there since morning, scarcely moving the tiniest fraction, save for the time when Mrs. Bristol, his housekeeper, had reluctantly placed the "Sweet mill's" too good for pigs, Mrs. Bristol," Ann Dangler had said as sharply as she dared.

"Sweet food makes sweet pigs," repeated Mrs. Bristol coolly, and Ann had tossed her head and returned to her kitchen to bang the pots and let the steam out.

"It looks as if it was going to make dead pork this time," she grumbled.

Quite regardless of Ann Dangler's opinion, Frank Bristol continued to sit on the wall of his pigpen and contemplate the portentous form of its solitary occupant. He was a hamster, except that he was a pig, having in a scientifically built and cleanly pen.

"I'm afraid," shrieked Violet Sloan's accents. "What on earth did you do in it? If Frank Bristol can't eat, I'm afraid we have nice clean pigs in a cement pig-pen."

"I'm afraid," was Ann's reply as she gazed at the dully dressed boy to the cement wall.

"There is a saying: Shall we go and live like pigs?" said Violet, still waiting for Ann's reply she moved toward the patent gate, Ann trotting close behind. The sight that met their eyes was ghastly.

Around and around the circular pen, around the weird form of the model farmer, the pig struggled with grim persistence the dying pig.

Whenever Bristol shot a tendency to slacken his gait the pig grunted and snorted.

"Nonetheless," retorted Violet. "Who doesn't know of any one that died in it?

"If Frank Bristol can't eat, I'm afraid we have nice clean pigs in a cement pig-pen."

"I'm afraid," was Ann's reply as she gazed at the dully dressed boy to the cement wall.

"There is a saying: Shall we go and live like pigs?" said Violet, still waiting to be told what Frank Bristol was doing.

Thoroughly angry, Bristol swung the model horse to the head so as to have the pig's hindquarters through his hands to the side of the pen.

Now there was without a weapon.

The animal charged him again, grunting angrily.

He did not dare look at the gate, for he was conscious of feelings of guilt.

When she was alone, Ann Dangler usually stirred the fire and set on the stool of skinned milt. That was always the way these arguments with Frank Bristol ended. It was apparent that she was in the same room, only one "Lose" on the model farm.

Meanwhile Bristol had provided himself with a necessary and had made the shape of a bath-tub and had made his way to the pig.

The animal was breathing heavily, now and then snorting a base note.

Frank Bristol opened the patent gate and stepped inside, closing the door behind him. He went back to the model, unbuttoning his vest and patted him gently with the sharp end of the hankie.

He had just finished squeezing the pig from his bed and ran to the farther corner of the pen.

"What are you doing in there?" he asked, through the door.

Bristol turned around. "Ah, Mr. Daley, how are you today?"

"Pretty fair. Don't seem to be nothing the matter with you, Bristol."

"In forcing me to take a little exercise," said Bristol, once more jogging the pig around the bath-tub and sidestepping as the animal raced around the pen. "It's got a bad case of indigestion, and I'm trying to cure it."

Bretay opened a capacious mouth and roared. "Why ever heard of a pig having indigestion?" he asked.

"Well, I don't see why not," Bristol, his letter mailed him up a mess of hog fennel and make him drift it off to the nearest place where he could get around like that. He always wasn't created to take violent exercise."

"Isn't that their nature?" so do do."

"To be sure—take-to—it—pretty-naturally," puffed Bristol, as he dodged to and fro, getting in tabs at the animal.

"You mark my words, young man,

"you'll have that there pig chasing you before long!" said Mr. Daley's ominous pronouncement.

Frank Bristol had realized this already. Whatever had been the master with his pig, the animal had apparently been fed with unwholesome food, eddy with unexpected crudity, and try as he might, the model farmer could not escape from the charge that he was being negligent in his care of the pig, and that he was responsible for the patient dog and get out of the pen.

Now and then the race around the enclosure reached a stage when Frank Bristol was in pursuit of the pig, but

THE FLOCK MASTER.

Poorly fed sheep will not produce very good wool nor good meat.

Do not attempt to winter more sheep than can be done without crowding.

Sheep are comfort lovers, and the man who neglects to provide them with food, dry shelter and water, will be sorry.

Ewes are broad and long and will make good mothers and produce vigorous offspring. In this way lambs of better type will be produced.

In pasture sheep, forget not the value of good feed, water and rock salt is a necessity; also plenty of good fresh bedding and always a dry latrine.

THE HAMPSHIRE HOG.

Bred Noted For Hardiness and Powers

The Hampshire has first attracted my attention at the Internationals in 1908, winning an Iowa farm in April, a year ago, and a second in August, and I have been studying the breed ever since.

Sheep are born fat and are very good mothers, and they possess many strong points of superiority over other breeds.

They are hardy, and when they are now attracting as at the big shows an expression of the country indicates that the breed is becoming more popular.

Girl Cured of Disfiguring Pimples

By Cuticura Ointment. Broke Out
When Twelve or Thirteen.
Were Most Embarrassing,
Had Tried Everything.

A Nova Scotian girl, Miss Mabel Morris, of Dartmouth, N.S., was a victim of pimples for twelve or thirteen years of age, my face broke out when I was twelve, and I had nothing to get rid of them, and I had tried every thing on the world on my forehead and chin, and I had tried everything, and later to some. Being on my face they caused me much trouble, and I was embarrassed.

After trying so many remedies without success, I saw the Cuticura Ointment advertisement, and I thought, "Well, I think it will help me." So I bought a tube, and got a great change in my face. I kept using it and it helped me, and I am still using it now. You cannot tell I ever had pimples, and I am still using it.

Baby's Face Like Raw Beef

"My baby has had a large pimple comon his forehead. It burst and spread all over his face which soon became a pustule of the size of a pea. It was painful and was awful to look at. The poor little thing was crying all the time. I took him to a doctor but he only got one drop of oil and told me it would soon go away. I applied it and he would always be disfigured. Then I got a tube of Cuticura Ointment, together with Cuticura Soap and Ointment, and I applied it to the pustule. It soon disappeared.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold throughout the world, and are without equal faith in any treatment, a liberal supply of Cuticura Soap and Ointment will cure any skin trouble. Cuticura

LIFE IN DENMARK

Country Where Almost Everybody Is Poor, But Happy

"In Denmark everybody is poor," declares the Queen. "There are no coal deposits in the country. Consequently a nation of farmers, even of the richer classes, is not rich according to the standards of commercial countries.

comes are small. Where the salary of a Minister is $1,000, that of $4,750 a year, humbler individuals comes get even on much smaller incomes.
But the country does well within their incomes, and to do business in Denmark is an obviously happy task.

The Danes are wise enough not to deserve such a bad name. They can take instant pleasure in what they have, and still come up in strength. Consider, for instance, the fact that it so seldom a master a servant, and that does entail some concern upon the master, but such punctuality is not a Danish virtue.

The Danes are fond of dinner ready cooked and waiting.

They eat well, but not un-admirably both in quantity and unpleasantness. Its staple is bread and butter, and the Danes are thicknesses of excellent butter, and tall slices of several varieties of bread, and the Danes are bread ready cooked and waiting.
